three miles from Guayama, with fine school buildings and many modern homes—houses with lawns and flowers beautiful to look at as well as live in. These are a pleasing contrast to the average old Spanish style city or plantation house with facade at the edge of the sidewalk, a plain front with or without balcony where the windows and doors are shutters during the day; and solid plain board doors that are bolted tight at night. Many of these houses are not so plain in the rear however for there may be a garden abundant in roses and many plantas of brilliant foliage, all of which is for only the private enjoyment of the family within.

These are apleasing contrast to the work of the private enjoyment of the family within.
